

Beach Clean-Up

In January 2025, there was an incident where two shipping containers fell off the vessel and into the water. Although the containers were successfully retrieved, packages of meat from one of the containers continued to wash ashore on a nearby beach for weeks.

To help manage the situation and protect our environment, we reached out to our partners at Northern Environmental to help. One local resident, whose private beach was heavily affected, received multiple cleanup visits from Northern Environmental as they worked to remove the washed-up packages of meat.

Recognizing the ongoing impact of marine waste in the area beyond the debris from the containers, Northern Environmental offered additional support to this resident by organizing a larger beach cleanup effort. In June, volunteers from Northern Environmental, WUT, and other local businesses came together to clean the shoreline, removing trash and helping restore the natural beauty of our beach and waters.
